DETAILED ACTION

Election/Restrictions

1. Applicant's election of Species C, claims 10-14, 31-33, as well as generic claims 1-6, 9,20, and 24-28 in the reply filed on March 28, 2006 is acknowledged. Because applicant did not distinctly and specifically point out the supposed errors in the restriction requirement, the election has been treated as an election without traverse (MPEP § 818.03(a)).
2. Claims 7-8, 15-19 and 29-30 are withdrawn from further consideration pursuant to 37 CFR 1.142(b), as being drawn to a nonelected invention, there being no allowable generic or linking claim.

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

3. The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

4. Claims 1-4, 9-14, 20, 24-26, 28 and 31-33 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Akutsu (US. Pat. No. 4,661,985).

Akutsu discloses nearly all that is recited in the claims since it teaches an apparatus (and method performed thereby) for separating tobacco lamina from ribs (i.e. winnowings) so that the tobacco lamina can be used in the making of cigarettes. The apparatus comprises means for measuring the lamina-yielding ratio in the tobacco raw material treatment flow in which the tobacco leaves are stripped into lamina and ribs.

Art Unit: 1731

Mechanical impact (i.e. impact sheet), which is continually adjusted, is imparted to the tobacco leaves to separate same, and arithmetic operation means, into which a measurement signal from the measuring means is applied, as a feedback signal, for searching a rotational number of the rotary rib removing machine, provides an optimum lamina size. The mechanical impact force in the rib-removing machine (i.e. detaching lamina from ribs) is automatically controlled in response to the result of treatment of the raw material tobacco leaves to provide an optimum lamina size. (See col. 1, line 57-col. 2, line 8). This disclosure obviously suggests the instant recitation regarding comparing settable nominal lamina size distribution to an actual (current) lamina size distribution, as such disclosure indicates that the optimum lamina size is a result of a comparator determining a measured lamina value with that which is a desired/optimal lamina size.

Regarding claims 11-14, while Akutsu may not specifically state that its impact sheet is metal, and is adjusted by a servo/step motor attached to the impact metal sheet via Bowden wire connections – defined by springs – absent evidence of criticality or unexpected result, by Applicant, the Examiner does not deem these limitations to be patentably distinguishable from the reference as one having ordinary skill in the art would have opted to have provided these in the apparatus/method of Akutsu, since they are well-known in the tobacco and electrical arts.

5. Claims 5-6 and 27 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Akutsu (US. Pat. No. 4,661,985) in view of Applicant Admitted Art.

While Akutsu may not specifically state that the dimensions of the tobacco particles are detected using a fine-beam light barrier, this would have been an obvious instrument in which to determine the tobacco particle dimensions of Akutsu since Applicant has admitted that such light-beams are well-known in the art as evidenced by the DE 19948559 reference.

Art Unit: 1731
